

Research

Findings

The new proposed combined Client Home & feed experience was better received than last round of testing.

Client Home was understood as a “dashboard” of the buyer’s home search.

Limiting certain triaging options at the listing-card level sufficed due to needing more information to make a decision.

In-app communication again emerged as particularly valuable and differentiating.

The 2-step listing review process can be up again. Users found it to be easier to manage triaged homes on the new Client Home.

The majority of test subjects pointed out the agent branding and was well received. It brings in a more personalized experience where my agent is always there to help when I need him/her.

